Let's Start!

Writing Spot: John finds out about Lima's colorful past.

Learning Outcome

Accurately use information about travel and vacations in social situations.

Ask your partner:

- What town or city would you want to research? Why?
- What is your favorite city in your country? Why?

Can Do Statements

- I can write a short text about history.
- I can ask and report about things and events in a written way.
- I can talk about places of interest.

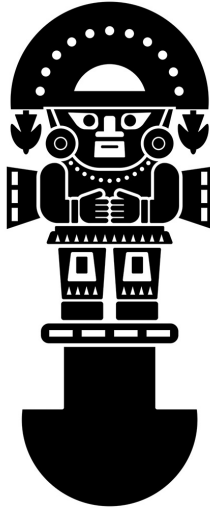

Let's Explore!

John starts to research how to make Pisco Sour cocktails. What does he find instead?

* "Instead" means to choose one thing over something else.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Lima's history can be traced to its colorful past. Before the 12th century, the area was inhabited by many indigenous groups. After this period, the powerful Inca Empire became the dominant culture. This highly advanced civilization called their empire Tawantinsuyu, the "Land of the Four Corners".

Their language was Quechua. The empire grew to include northern Chile and parts of Bolivia and Ecuador before the Spanish invaded in 1531. Francisco Pizarro captured Cuzco in 1533 and established the city of Lima. The new inhabitants used gold and silver found in the Andes Mountains to increase the country's power.

In 1821, Peru became an independent country by defeating the Spanish. Since that time, African, Asian and other European cultures have made Lima a melting pot.

Let's Practice!

Learning Points

Writing About History

Writing about history means including a lot of details and historical information. Writing about history shows your effective writing skills and your understanding of information.

1. Research an event in history. Use more than one source.
2. Stay on topic. When you write about history, you include events and issues not descriptions.
3. Include the important details.
4. Do not include your opinion. It is on the history not your opinion of it.
5. Write in chronological order.
6. Write in the Past tense.
